Circuit suggested? Is that the plaintiffs' position?

MS. PUCCINELLI: No, Your Honor. Plaintiffs contend that we should only be proceeding to trial on the disparate impact theory of the Fair Housing Act claim.

THE COURT: All right. And as to that, it's the position of the plaintiffs that it should proceed to trial on all three steps of the analysis as identified by the Fourth Circuit?

MS. PUCCINELLI: That is correct, Your Honor.

THE COURT: All right. Now, with respect to the arguments that I have heard, you might reiterate, just to refresh my recollection, what is the plaintiffs' position on the effect, if any, of the anti-harboring statute on the plaintiffs' claim in this case?

MS. PUCCINELLI: Your Honor, plaintiffs' position is that the anti-harboring statute has no place in the analysis on step one. The Fourth Circuit's -- the Fourth Circuit's opinion clearly states, under the first step, the plaintiff must demonstrate a robust causal connection between the defendants' challenged policy and the disparate impact on the protected class. And it goes -- the Fourth Circuit goes on to identify how plaintiffs have done that. And that's either through statistical evidence or other evidence that specifically links the policy at issue with a disproportionate impact on the protected class. And
